

Honoring Trailblazers in Mental Health

Drs. Mamie Phipps Clark and Kenneth Bancroft Clark

Drs. Mamie Phipps Clark and Kenneth Bancroft Clark are renowned for their groundbreaking "Doll Study" involving over 200 Black children. Their work provided vital evidence in the historic Brown vs. The Board of Education case, highlighting the psychological harm of school segregation on Black children. Dr. Mamie Phipps Clark's passion for mental health equality led to the establishment of her own agency, "The Northside Center for Child Development," in Harlem in February 1946.

For over three decades, Dr. Clark dedicated herself to counseling and providing comprehensive psychological services to underserved communities. After her retirement in 1979, Dr. Mamie Phipps Clark continued to make a difference by serving on advisory boards and remaining active in her community.

Join us in saluting these trailblazers for their unwavering dedication to equality, education, and mental well-being!
